

Project Management

Over the past months, the way we work has changed dramatically for the majority of us. Although these changes may have been disruptive, they have also given us the opportunity to re-assess and try out new ways of working in our business environments, enabling us to test out changes that may not have been considered in the past.

As life returns to a new normal, there may be changes that have been adopted over the past few months that now make sense to be more permanent, perhaps with the need for higher hygiene levels, amendments to social or eating spaces or re-arranged work areas to facilitate flexible working and social distancing.

To ensure a structured and organized approach to how we re-organize our working environments, the need for formal project management methodologies and associated tools has never been so important. With the need to focus evermore on costs, but also for change to be rapid and effective, you will be seeking certainty and cost-efficient delivery of change.

Sodexo has an established Project Management Framework and a team of Project Managers who can lighten the load by understanding your requirements and then delivering them to an agreed cost and timeline, allowing you to focus your attention on getting business moving again.
